Summer days in Dubai can reach up to 105°F, which is why most cruise companies offer trips between November and March. During this time, temperatures are much so that you can avoid the nearest air-conditioned shopping center. Instead, they spend days exploring the streets of the Old Town and riding a dune buggy. The city becomes particularly crowded during January, which is also the month of the shopping festival. Locals and foreigners flock to Dubai at this time to get discounts of up to 75%. When quieter streets are more Try to plan your trip in the shoulder months of November and March. What are the must-do cruises in Dubai? Dubai has much more to look for than just high-end shopping and the tallest building in the world. Here are some of the city's top attractions that you can easily fit into a day or two of sightseeing. Dubai Museum. Housed in Dubai's oldest building, spend a few hours here to learn all about the development of this world-class city. Dune Bashing. Drive from the city to the stunning sand dunes, where dune bashing – an exciting ride through the sand in an SUV – has become increasingly popular. Camel ride. For a little more relaxed, travel across the golden sand dunes on your own camel. Dubai Mall. Even if you don't want to buy anything, the largest and most luxurious shopping mall in the world is a must while you're in the city. Al Fahidi. Stroll through the streets of old Dubai, where you'll find delicious and surprisingly cheap street food and traditional cafes in sandstone buildings. Cruises from Fremantle Discover the oceans aboard a cruise through Australia, New Zealand, Asia, North America and Europe with these top cruise deals for every budget. 7 best cruise lines for toddlers With babysitting and dead-friendly activities, these are the best cruise lines for toddlers that make your little ones smile from ear to ear on the sea. If you long for the open ocean, but the thought of all-night discos, thousand-seater dining rooms or overcrowded Caribbean ports that have become duty-free shopping malls, you know, not all cruise ships are huge, floating resorts. A small but growing industry niche revolves around small ships – a broad group of yachts, robust expedition ships and classic sailing savers – where passenger numbers are 200 instead of 2,000. The size of these ships not only offers a more comfortable atmosphere, but also creates a completely different experience on board and on land. You can kayak with Lindblad on a wilderness island in Mexico, set sail and climb on the rigging with Star Clippers, follow a whale on a cruise ship in Alaska on a cruise ship in Alaska into a quiet fjord, or hop around the Greek islands aboard the converted ferry from easyCruise. Small-ship cruises aren't just about caviar and private cabanas from luxury ships (most are also small). It is more about geographical access to the world's more undesirable ports. In the southern Caribbean, for example, your itinerary on the Canadian Sailing Expedition's caledonia high-speed ship could avoid the Barbados marquee for the stunning volcanic Union Island. And when Caledonia sails in Canada and New England, you can get a perspective on Newfoundland's ancient marine culture from an on-board expert and then visit Port au Choix, a small town rich in fishing history. Of course, these intimate experiences mean you have to forgo big-ship amenities such as Broadway shows, several dining options, extensive children's programs, and endless watering holes. In addition, they enjoy such a personalized environment when exploring the globe usually comes at a premium price, with a few notable exceptions (see budget selection below). However, typical cruise holiday add-ons such as excursions are often included in the price, as well as access to kayaks and bicycles. Before we start our picks, let's answer a question: How do we define small? It is a bit of an arbitrary distinction; with new cruise ships such as the 4,200 Norwegian epic and the 220,000 tons, 5,400-passenger oasis of the seas on the horizon, the concept is small relative. For this story, however, we will try to stay with non-luxury ships for less than 300 passengers. Best for Expedition Cruises The Line: Lindblad Expeditions Why: Lindblad Expeditions, allied with National Geographic, offers gentle adventure trips on a fleet of seven seven Ships with 48 to 150 passengers. Forget big-ship accommodations like in-cabin TVs, casinos and several bars and restaurants (although the newest ship in the fleet, National Geographic Explorer, has added a decent spa and alternative restaurant). Ships are comfortable, and there are some great details as the local and organic food used in meals. But Lindblad's ships serve more as base camps for exploring the world's waters, with cruises to the Galapagos, South Pacific, Indian Ocean, Antarctica, Greenland, and The Arctic Circle. In addition to the mandatory animal gyroscopes used for landings, ships are equipped with scientific tools such as hydrophones (for sniffing marine mammals), underwater cameras and video microscopes. The line is considered particularly good for its staff of topflight naturalists, historians, underwater specialists and expedition leaders who accompany each of his trips. National Geographic photographers accompany every sailing aboard the National Geographic Explorer and most sailing trips on National Geographic Endeavour as well as on selected photo expeditions across the entire fleet. As you'd expect from National Geographic, the focus is also on leaving the lowest possible carbon footprint. Honorable Mention: Hurtigruten's Fram Why: The 318-passenger Fram, the scout of the Norwegian cruise line Hurtigruten, literally covers the globe from top to bottom— every year he sails a world cruise between the Arctic Circle-Antarctic Circle. On board, this ice-hardened polar expedition ship offers some stylish twists, such as a minimalist Arctic chic design (iceberg sculptures, strict target photography) and flat-screen TVs in cabins, but don't be fooled by the traps; these cruises are all about nature. Like other expedition ships, Fram has its own small landing craft that take passengers to incredible coastal locations. Passengers are an international mix, and the ship operates in at least three languages, including English, German and Norwegian. Best for Scenic Nature Cruises The Line: Cruise West Why: The family-owned Cruise West is best known for its up-to-date and personal Alaska nuptis, but the route is expanding increasingly to places like Mexico's Cortez Sea, Central America and Southeast Asia. It uses both company-owned ships and chartered ships. Large ships do not make it to uninhabited Alaska nan islands such as the Shumagins or the Bering Sea, where Cruise Wests Spirit of Oceanus spends time on a 24-day voyage. But despite some of the launch-free destinations visited by the line's 78- to 138-passenger ships, the experience on board is more like scenic cruising, with a focus on the visual - waterfalls, icebergs, birds, Cruises in the West are not necessarily for hardcore adventurers. They are better suited for nature lovers who want a convenient way to see wilderness and coastal communities without distractions from large ships and without getting too dirty they are seriously determined). There are lectures on board (each trip includes an Exploration Leader) and evening performances by local artists, but otherwise the activities are limited to a relative minimum. Basic excursions are included in the price (usually a hike), as well as snorkelling and kayaking equipment for certain routes. The line also uses inflatable zoa circles to explore remote destinations. Honorable Mention: Voyages of Discovery's MV Discovery Why: Voyages of Discovery's MV Discovery takes its budget-conscious older audience on enriching cruises to rarely visited destinations – Iceland, faroe islands, Norway's North Cape, Amazon, Devil's Island and Easter Island, as well as Antarctica and sub-Antarctic islands – without the strict shore excursions and spartan accommodations of real expedition ships. It is also one of the cheapest options offered given the exotic routes. On board, passengers will find some traditional big-ship touches, including two pools, several bars, a small spa and an alternative restaurant. The passenger capacity is 800, but the ship has a policy of never carrying more than 650 passengers, and the experience is airy and social. Best Tall-Ship Cruises The Line: Star Clippers Why: For the high-ship enthusiast, there's nothing like sailing under a stary or sunny sky, powered by stormy sea winds. And if you want to enjoy the power of the breeze while exploring less-traveled ports in the southern Caribbean, Southeast Asia and the Mediterranean, Star Clippers is hard to beat. The three ships in the fleet – the flagship royal Clipper with 227 passengers and the 170-passenger twins Star Clipper and Star Flyer – are among the fastest Clipper ships ever built. Feel the sails catch the breeze, help lift and trim, or turn into a spider and climb high in the rigging. Passengers on board do not stick to rigid schedules as on conventional cruise ships, and the evening dress code is always elegantly casual (with the exception of themed evenings such as Pirate Night). Water sports are also an important part of any cruise, with free snorkeling, kayaking, sailing and other activities at sea offered directly from the ship. (You can also get your dive certification.) Star Clippers has a new big ship to be launched in the spring of 2011. The five-masted sailing ship will be the largest sailing ship ever built at 7,400 gross tons and a length of 518 feet. The new building will carry 296 passengers – still below our passenger limit of 300 passengers. Honorable Mention: Canadian Sailing Expeditions Why: While Star Clippers offers a fairly simple sailing experience, Canadian Sailing Expeditions is even more – it's like a for sailing enthusiasts. A cruise aboard the relaxed, 62-passenger, 12-ssegettcaledonia also offers an enrichment experience that focuses on the history and natural attractions of the unique places it visits. The ship spends summers in the Canadian Canadian Popular places like Halifax and Quebec City for less visited ports such as Tadoussac, Quebec and Lark Harbour, Newfoundland. During the Caribbean winter season, the ports include out-of-service places such as Mayreau, Union Island and Les Saintes. The ship docks overnight in ports, which has two advantages: maximum daily sailing and nightlife. Best Budget Cruises The Line: easyCruise Why: It's true that prices have risen in recent years, but easyCruise is still one of the cheapest options for small Greek island cruises (and don't pay brochure prices – the line constantly offers special offers). Cruises sail on the bare bone easyCruise Life, which has only one restaurant, a tiny gym and spartan cabins, many of which are equipped with a quadruple setup. The maximum capacity is 600 passengers, which we recognize is larger than all of the above ships, but an Aegean trip on easyCruise Life is small ship cruise through and through. The port stops are unique – docked for up to 20 hours at popular cruise destinations such as Mykonos and Rhodes, coupled with long calls on unique islands such as Syros and Kalymnos – and the atmosphere on board resembles a small community of young, active travellers who can't use much for a ship, apart from a quick meal, sleeping and a trip to the nearest port. This is a serious no-frills, goal-intensive cruise on the cheap, with special rates that sometimes hover around 30 dollars per person, per night hostel area – if you're cool with a quadruple room or tiny windowless double room. Rates include two meals and a daily cleaning service. Honorable Mention: The closest approach to easyCruise is the Greek ferry system, a popular method of interstate travel between the islands. easyCruise Life is, after all, a converted ferry. Ferry.
